Introduction to GCSE History (Modern World)

Why study History?
History is about people – real people whose lives were sometimes exciting, like being a ‘flapper’ in the 1920s, and sometimes frightening, like sharing a muddy war-torn trench with rats, and feeling sick with fear waiting for the enemy to attack. Whatever their lives were about, there is a fascinating, and sometimes tragic, story behind them.

As well as being exciting, this course will help you develop skills which will be useful in a wide range of jobs or in the further study of History.

You will study:
* International Relations, 1919–1989 (the core);
* How British society changed, 1906–1918;
* One Study in Depth taken from the following:
  - Germany 1919–1945;
  - Russia 1905–1941;
  - USA 1919–1941;

You will learn the following skills:
* How to interpret and evaluate pieces of information (sources);
* How to communicate and apply your knowledge;
* How to describe and analyse the key features of the period studied;
* Critical thinking and problem solving.

You will have the opportunity to study photographs, films, videos, CD ROMs, newspapers and original written sources.

Assessment:
The examination papers cover the full range of grades from G to A*. There are three aspects to your assessment.

Coursework (25% of final grade)
You will write two assignments of about 1250 words each and there will be a choice of topics. Assignment 1 focuses on an individual, development, place or event. Assignment 2 focuses on an investigation of an historical issue based on sources.

Paper 1 (2 hours) (45% of final grade)
The paper is divided into three sections:
Section A: You will answer one question from a choice of two on the core;
Section B: You will answer one question from a choice of four on the core;
Section C: You will answer one compulsory question, plus one question from a choice of two on the chosen Study in Depth.

Paper 2 (1 hour 30 minutes) (30% of final grade)
This paper has 5–7 compulsory questions set on a range of sources and is a detailed investigation of an historical issue taken from Britain 1906–1918.
Notes from Making History:
The Rise of Hitler

Germany 1919-1923

1. German people had resentment against the war.
   - German people were shocked when General Ludendorff asked for peace; the Kaiser abdicated in 1918 as they thought the war was going well for them because they only heard of German victories, not German defeats.
   - The Treaty of Versailles also made them bitter people; Germans had been proud of their navy and army and found it hard to believe it had been defeated. Therefore, they mocked the fact that it had been cut down; they wanted Germany to be great. Hitler made good use of this resentment.

2. There was a threat from communism.
   - It was suspected that there would be a Communist revolution in Germany as they were powerful in the chaotic years of 1918-19. There were Communist revolutions in the naval base at Kiel; the capital, Berlin; Munich and other cities.
   - The German government (after Kaiser abdicated) made a deal with the army to prevent communism. With volunteer regiments, Freikorps, the Communists were defeated.
   - However, many still feared communism as they were strong. Hitler took advantage of this fear and used it to win votes—mainly the middle classes and businessmen.

   - The new government met in Weimar in 1919 and therefore named the Weimar Government. The first government was Friedrich Ebert and his government had to agree to the armistice of 1918 and sign the T.O.V. in 1919.
   - Many Germans blamed the Weimar Republic for the T.O.V. and the end of the war and the calling of peace (instead of General Ludendorff). They had 'stabbed Germany in the back'. The communists also hated them for stopping the revolution.
• The Germans had never experienced a democracy and many still thought the upper classes and Germany were the true rulers.
• There were many different political parties in the Reichstag and a party could only get an overall majority by forming a coalition. The coalitions didn’t last long.
• By 1933 the Germans were ready for a dictatorship they mistrusted the democracy.

E Economic Crisis
• The war cost Germany a lot of money.
• New unemployment was high and there were few jobs for soldiers returning.
• The T.O.V took away some industrial areas of Germany - occupied, Saar. The T.O.V also said Germany had to pay reparations to the Allies - the total was £6,600 million.
• Britain and France wanted Germany to pay up quickly because they owed money to the USA (they had borrowed during the war). Germany could not afford to pay up and inflation spirited out of control.
• The French were angry because the Germans weren’t keeping up with the payments. In 1923 they sent troops into the Ruhr, Germany - an industrial area. The German workers put up passive resistance and then the German currency became worthless.
• Hitler promised to the country out of those problems and the middle classes were hit most badly by inflation.

The Nazi Party in the early years
• Hitler went into politics after the war. In 1919 he went to a pub in Munich for the German Workers Party. It was small and had little money. Hitler was made a committee member and soon controlled the group. He changed the name to the National Socialist German Workers Party, NSDAP - Nazi. In 1920 he helped launch the party's 25 point programme. The ideas were a mixture:
1) Nationalistic - aimed at making Germany great
2) Socialist - to help working people
3) Anti-Semitic - against the Jews.

Hitler's own beliefs were simple. He believed German people were superior and belonged to the Aryan race - he said they were the master race. Everybody else, especially Jews, were inferior. Hitler also hated communists, the T-O-V - the Weimer Republic - he didn't believe in democracy but in dictatorships.

The Nazi Party started attracting attention. Hitler set up the SA - an armed, organised force. They were called the SA (Stormtroopers) Brownshirts - their uniform. They were violent.

In 1923 Hitler felt he had enough support to seize power. At a meeting in a beer hall in Munich he announced he was taking over the government. The next morning with General Ludendorff he marched into Munich. But he didn't get enough support and was sent to prison. He was sentenced to 5 years but only served 9 months, during which time he wrote Mein Kampf, My Struggle. From the Beer Hall Putsch he learnt to take power legally next time.

Stueasemann Era 1923 - 30
- Hitler was in prison - situation in country improved - almost normal.
- Most problems were with other countries so the foreign minister was important. He was Gustav Stueasemann.

History Mock

History exam: 2 hrs

Section A - 2 questions, only answer 1 (worth 15 marks)
Section B - 4 questions, only answer 1 (worth 20 marks)
Section C - Germany 1919-45, 1 compulsory question, 2 questions - choose 1 (worth 40 marks)
1) Make a table like the one below to show the number of soldiers killed in the war:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Allies</th>
<th>France</th>
<th>Belgium</th>
<th>Britain</th>
<th>Italy</th>
<th>Russia</th>
<th>U.S.A.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>

<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Central Powers</th>
<th>Germany</th>
<th>Austria-Hungary</th>
<th>Bulgaria</th>
<th>Turkey</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

2) Draw a block graph using these figures. Start with the country that lost fewest soldiers, finish with the country that lost the most.

3) Which country do you think suffered most in the First World War? Before you answer this, consider the following questions:
   (a) Which countries had enemy armies fighting on their soil?
   (b) Which countries suffered damage to buildings, communications and farmland?
   (c) Which country suffered the greatest loss of soldiers?
   (d) In which countries did civilians suffer in the war?
   Now think about the first question again and write a couple of paragraphs to say which countries you think suffered most in the war and why and which countries you think suffered least in the war and why.

4) Read paragraph 1 again:
   (a) What did the countries who won expect to get out of the war?
   (b) How do you think the suffering of different countries would affect their attitude to the war and to the countries that they had defeated?
1) Where and when did the leaders meet for the peace conference?

2) How many nations were represented?

3) Who were the 'Big Three' and what countries did they represent?

4) Write a paragraph about each of the Big Three explaining what their different attitudes to the peace treaty were.

5) Which of the Big Three got his own way at first and why?

6) What was the first task of the peace conference?

7) What does the phrase 'national self-determination' mean?

8) What were the demands of:-
   (a) The Poles
   (b) The Italians
   (c) The Czechs, and
   (d) The Yugoslavs?

9) Which countries did not take part in the peace conference and why?
Great Suffering

1. Alleys | Soldiers Killed | Central Powers | Soldiers Killed
---|---|---|---
France | 1,400,000 | Germany | 2,000,000
Belgium | 50,000 | Austria-Hungary | 1,200,000
Britain | 750,000 | Bulgaria | 100,000
Italy | 600,000 | Turkey & Greece | 325,000
Russia | 1,700,000 | |
U.S.A | 116,000 | |

2. On graph paper.

3. I think France suffered the worst in World War I because a lot of the fighting took place in France, and this caused an area called the Battle of the Somme to be renamed. Areas which could have been used for farming turned into spaces full of mud because lots of high-explosive shells exploded there.

   Besides good land being made useless and lots of animals being killed for soldiers’ food, over two million people had to flee their homes and to find them in ruins, as over 3/4 of a millions were destroyed.

   Many of these people had no jobs to go back to as well because 23,000 factories were bombed. Getting around was made more difficult as well because 5,600 kilometers of railways and 48,000 kilometers of roads were wrecked. No other country was torn apart as much as France was.

   Germany lost the most soldiers but France still lost 1,400,000 due to the war and 2,500,000 were wounded.

   The countries which I think suffered least in the war were the U.S.A. and Italy. I think the U.S.A. didn’t suffer very much because they only entered late in 1917 and 110,000 men were killed in the war, which was a small number compared to the size of their country. Also, it made them quite a bit of money as they lent a lot to Britain which was earning interest.

4 a) The countries which won the war would be expected to receive more land, money, power in return for winning.

b) I think the countries that won the war wouldn't want another to take place because it was such a terrible experience. I think the countries that won would feel a lot of anger and hate towards the countries that lost for causing them so much catastrophe. How do you think each individual country may have felt.

\[ \frac{29}{32} \]
Describe the terms of the Treaty of Versailles and explain why the Germans objected to it.

The Germans felt they were treated too harshly and it was not fair to blame them for the start of the war. In compensation for this, they were not only given a large amount of money. Their armed forces were dramatically cut down which angered them and some of their land was given away. What was most annoying was more land was ceded to other countries, like Austria-Hungary was split, but Article 231 of the treaty says Germany had to make total blame for the war.

Alsace-Lorraine land which was taken from France by Germany was given back to France. France also took over the Saar region of Germany. Germany was still upset as the region was an important coalfield. The French were only allowed to stay 15 years; however, after that time, the land was to be returned to the region where the German people was not allowed to return to Poland was made an independent country. The Germans cherished this because the Poles got a 'corridor' to the Baltic Sea which cut off East Prussia from the rest of Germany. The Saar mining in the Rhineland in Germany was placed with the mines and the rights were re-nationalized to try and prevent Germany ever invading France again. An area of land called North Schleswig was handed over to Denmark and Danzig, a city with both Polish and German people was made a 'free city.'

As well as Germany's land being taken away from them, they also had to pay reparations for the damage done in the war. Because they were said to blame for the war according to Article 231, they were the only ones who had to pay it. The total amount they had to pay wasn't decided until 1921 and was a total of 6 billion marks. Most of this went to the French but each of the countries which won the war were also credited some. The war materials which were supposed to be destroyed and would not have been made happened as the Kaiser had gone to Russia and died.

Germany's military strength was to be severely limited by the treaty. Their army was cut down to 100,000 men and their wartime guns were handed over to the winner. It would not have to be rebuilt. Their navy was scrapped down to 26 ships and they were forced to surrender submarines and an airforce.

After the treaty was signed, the union of Austria and Hungary was forbidden.
This was called the Anschluss, which is German for union.

The Germans nicknamed the treaty 'Staatsverträge' which means 'agreed peace'. They called it this as they had no choice but to agree as there were too many people in Germany wanting peace.

E: An excellent essay - you have approached this essay confidently and always kept sight of what the question was asking.
The peace treaties

1. The peace talks were held in Paris, France. The three most important delegates were Clemenceau, Paul Lloyd George, and Woodrow Wilson. Clemenceau came from France, Lloyd George from Britain, and Wilson came from USA.

2. There were four treaties. The treaty written with Germany was called the Treaty of Versailles, and the treaty with Austria was called the Treaty of Saint-Germain.

3. The Rhine land in Germany was demilitarized and this was so they couldn't attack France again.

4. The area of land which Germany gave to Poland helped Poland because it made Poland larger. This made Germany smaller and weaker.

5. A colony is an area which another country owns. The German colonies were given to two countries.

6. The payments Germany had to make were called reparations.

7. A covenant is a promise which is put at the beginning of the treaty. But what did it set up?

8. Woodrow Wilson wanted a fair peace and had 14 points which he thought would make it fair. But Clemenceau wanted revenge and wanted to make Germany weak. Needs a little more detail.

9. One influence on the peace treaties which Wilson had was that there should be no secret talks. Another influence which Clemenceau had on the peace treaties was to make Germany pay lots of money.

10. Germany's army was reduced to 100,000 men. The German navy was never allowed a submarine, and most of their ships were sunk. They weren't allowed an airport.
11. The purpose of the League of Nations was to stop future wars breaking out again and to discuss problems with countries.

12. Two punishments in the Treaty of Versailles were that Austria was never allowed to unite with Germany again and some of their lands were given away.

13. Article 231 of the Treaty of Versailles was that Germany had to take full blame for the war. The Germans hated it so much because they thought other countries had started it as well like Russia and Hungary.

14. National self-determination is when Italian people for example should be under Italian rule. This was put in to practice with the Poles as after World War II they could live under Polish rule in Poland.

15. Three areas taken from Germany were the Saar, Danzig, and Memel.

35/40 Good result - you have revised well. Well done.
The League of Nations

1. Read through the sheet The League of Nations at Work. Then make a list of all the disputes mentioned in chronological order.

2. Fill in a chart to show each of these disputes, the action taken by the League, and the result.

3. Make two lists, one of disputes that were solved by the League, one of disputes which were not solved.

4. Look at your chart of the Problems facing the League in the 1920s and then answer these questions:
   a) How many of the disputes between nations did the League solve?
   b) How many were solved by the Conference of Ambassadors?
   c) How many were not settled at all?

5. Which of the following statements do you think is most true?
   A The League didn’t solve any disputes at all
   B The League solved some disputes but not all
   C The League solved all the disputes.

Write down the statement you have decided is true and then write four reasons why you have decided on that one.

4. Two examples are that there was no major war and mostly all the disputes were sorted out.

5. The league was successful in solving some disputes between 1919-25 because the countries involved were willing to act as the league said. It failed with other disputes as these countries weren't willing to listen.

6. Major nations like USA, Germany, Russia were not members at the beginning because the USA didn't join, Germany wasn't allowed to and Russia didn't because it was divided into Germany and had a communist government.

For what extent was the League of Nations a success?

The League of Nations was set up to promote world peace and solve disputes between countries by peaceful rather than fighting. Special committees were formed to improve world problems like health, safety, protection, working conditions, refugees and victims. The League also had a disarmament commission whose aim was to reduce countries armed forces.

If members were disagreeing over something and talks weren't working out and a member attacked another member, then all other members of the League would help the member who was being attacked. This was called collective security and the help would be arranged by the Council (who would meet in a crisis). Using the process of collective security the League believed it would keep peace in the world.

Besides the special committees, disarmament commission and the council, the League also had the League of Nations, Secretary, Permanent Court of Justice and the Assembly. The main job of the League of Nations was to reduce anger on the German and Turkish colonies which were being ruled over by Germany and France for a while. The Secretary was like the League's assistant and it handled paperwork, communications and queries. The Permanent Court of Justice was in the Hague, Holland. It was set up to sort out disputes between countries. Finally the Assembly met on a yearly basis. Each year it discussed anything raised by a member, fixed the League's budget, let new members in and elect non-permanent members of the Council. Each member of the League had one vote.

Britain, France, Italy and Japan were permanent members of the League. However, the USA wasn't, even though Woodrow Wilson, the American president, had thought of the idea and was quite the supporter of the League of Nations. It is said that both Britain and France had reasoned that the USA wouldn't want to join then they never would have.

Besides the USA, no other main countries didn't join: Germany and Russia. Germany didn't join because it wasn't allowed to until 1926. Russia didn't join due to its communist leaders. This was a weakness of the League, from the beginning - it was never a true international organisation.

The League started off on downhill and lost its authority over the Wall Street crash. After world trade slumped Japan had to rely on exporting goods. The Japanese turned their attention to Manchuria, a Chinese province. They invaded in September 1931. Nobody wanted to get involved as they had too many problems of their own. By the time the League did anything it was too late. Japan didn’t back off. The League had shown signs of weakness towards aggressive nations.

The same had happened when Italy invaded Abyssinia. The League’s authority had faltered and Italy continued to invade Abyssinia.

The League members didn’t respect its authority. The League was too optimistic to believe everybody would. Britain and France didn’t take it seriously and regarded it as a ‘talking shop’. It wasn’t good at getting countries to disarm and it never had its own army.

However, the League was good at solving small disputes. It was also well organised and was successful at dealing with working conditions.

(6) A good thorough essay - you have approached the question confidently and attempted a conclusion. Well done.
Look at the cartoon on the League of Nations and answer the questions which follow.

This cartoon appeared in the magazine Punch, 10 December 1919.

(a) Who was the US President referred to as the 'designer of the bridge in the cartoon? [Image: Cartoon showing the League of Nations with a gap in the bridge.]

(b) What had all the countries named in the cartoon recently had in common? They had won the war, all involved in peace talks.

(c) Which major country, a founder member of the League, is not mentioned in the cartoon? Japan, permanent member of council.

(d) Why does the cartoon show the keystone missing from the bridge? It shows the League isn't complete without USA. America wanted a monopoly of the League (not a commitment to isolationist policy).

(e) What system of security did the League of Nations offer its members? Collective security: if one member is attacked, all other members help that country try to talk about it, economic sanctions, military sanctions.

Read the extract on the League of Nations, and then answer the questions which follow.

The League will consist of large and small countries of the world in an effort to try and keep world peace. All decisions will be taken by the Council and the Assembly. All decisions will have to be unanimous before any action is taken by the League.

*Adapted from the Covenant of the League of Nations, 1920.*

(a) Briefly explain how the structure of the Council was different to that of the Assembly.

(b) What was meant by the phrase 'all decisions will have to be unanimous'? [1]

(c) Why was that method of making decisions used? It was fair and everybody had an equal say.

(d) Explain why the League of Nations was formed:

(i) To prepare, keep at peace, and promote international cooperation by negotiations before the war.

(ii) To settle disputes by arbitration and good offices.

(iii) To regulate armaments.

(iv) To provide international guarantees of peace and security.

(v) To set up an international court of justice.

(vi) To contribute to the cause of universal peace and security.

(vi) To co-operate in the promotion of economic, social, and其它.
League of Nations

GCSE Question

1) The US President that was key to creating the League was President Wilson. He was given the title 'Father of the League' but the USA never joined because the American public didn’t want to get involved in Europe’s problems.

2) All the countries named in the cartoon had or won the war and were all involved in the peace talks.

3) The major country which was a founder member of the League that wasn’t mentioned in the cartoon was Japan. Japan was a permanent member of the council.

4) The cartoon shows one region missing from the picture because it is America. It shows that the League can’t compete with America. America didn’t join the League because they had isolationist policy which means they wanted to concentrate on themselves.

5) The system of security which the League offered was collective security. This meant if one member was attacked by another member all the members of the League would see it as an attack on themselves. Firstly they try and talk about it and try and work it out without fighting. If this doesn’t work then they use economic sanctions. This is when they stop all the things the country needs going to them e.g. oil. Finally if all this fails to work then they would use military sanctions. The League never used military sanctions.

A good response - you have listened carefully but at times you could expand on your answer.

20) The aim of the League was to make the world more peaceful so it was able to meet in a room where all the assembly would sit so it was not large. Its permanent members were Britain, France, Italy, and Japan.

6) The phrase ‘all decisions will be made unanimously’ wasn’t used because meant everybody had to agree on the final decision.
(i) This method was used because it was fair and gave everybody an equal say no matter how big or small their country was.

(ii) The League of Nations was formed to keep the peace. Its aim was to discuss problems instead of fighting over them. It also wanted to improve working conditions and control health problems, drugs. The League also wanted to persuade people to cut down on arms and weapons. It also thought it would stop any secret agreements being made like before World War 1. To deal with aggressive nations.

(iii) When the League was first set up it was successful. It solved many disputes between countries. This was because the countries involved accepted the League’s authority. It was also successful at dealing with working problems and health issues. Some people may argue that it wasn’t a success from the beginning. The International Labor Organization was made up of factory owners and workers from all different countries. Their aim was to improve wages, hours, meals and holidays for the workers. If the International Labor Organization found that a country was treating its employees badly they would have to improve. The Organization managed to get governments to ban using child labour. Also, the Refugees Department managed to provide food and reunite people with their families.

Extravagant the league had some successes at the beginning others may argue that it was failure. Firstly, a main and powerful country was not part of it, Japan. Also, Germany and Russia were not allowed to join so an agreement three powerful countries were not part of the League. The League did not have any army of its own and had to rely on the members own forces.

I think when the League was set up it was quite successful but it had a weakness that America didn’t join. I also think that when it was set up people were trying hard but as time went on the nations wore off and people were more interested in their own countries rather than world problems.

A good response but at times you could expand on points much further. Good at answering the question clearly but you need to put out your response.

Germany 1918–45

Was the Weimar Republic doomed from the start?

How did Germany emerge from defeat in the First World War?
In September 1918, Allied troops broke through the German Hindenburg line on the Western Front. Defeat in the war now looked inevitable. The British blockade of German ports had produced serious food shortages in Germany, and there were many calls for the country to make peace. In October, sailors at the naval base at Wilhelmshaven mutinied and there was a further mutiny at Kiel when the order was given for one last attack on the British navy. On 7 November, Kurt Eisner declared Bavaria to be a socialist republic, and all the workers and soldiers formed councils similar to the soviets in Russia.

This ‘German Revolution’ so frightened Germany’s leaders that they persuaded Kaiser Wilhelm to abdicate. President Ebert had already made it clear that there could be no peace if the Kaiser remained in office – and Germany desperately needed peace.

So on 9 November, Kaiser Wilhelm stood down and Friedrich Ebert, one of the leaders of the Social Democratic Party (SPD), announced that Germany was now a republic. Ebert himself was to be president and his colleague, Philipp Scheidemann, became chancellor (the senior government official, similar to our prime minister).

Problems for the new government

To restore order in Germany, the new government quickly signed the armistice with the Allies on November 1918. Many Germans were shocked by the German surrender, even though there was really little choice. The decision to sign the armistice soon gave rise to the ‘stab in the back’ theory – the idea that Germany was betrayed by its politicians and should have fought on. Nationalists called Ebert’s government ‘the November Criminals’. The new republic had got off to a very unpopular start.

A major problem for Ebert was establishing how Germany should be governed. Some Germans wanted a system of government based on communism, as had recently been established in Russia. In January 1919 the Spartacus League, Germany’s Communist Party, staged a revolt in Berlin in an attempt to seize power and make Germany a communist country. Ebert’s government had few troops, as the army had been disarmed after the war. So the government formed units of volunteer soldiers. These ‘Freikorps’ (Free Corps) soldiers were bitter opponents of communism and crushed the revolt. On 15 January the leaders of the revolt, Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg, were executed by the Freikorps. (Later, in 1920, when a Soviet republic was proclaimed in Munich, the Freikorps crushed that too.) The actions of the Freikorps led to bitter hostility between the SPD and the German Communist Party (KPD), which lasted throughout the time of the Weimar Republic.

Democracy established

Just four days after the execution of Liebknecht and Luxemburg, elections were held for a National Assembly, which would draw up a new constitution for Germany. The SPD won the most seats, but it did not have a majority. However, after joining in coalition with the Centre Party (Z) and Democratic Party (DDP), it had the support of more than three-quarters of the 423 deputies.

As there was unrest in Berlin, the National Assembly held its first meeting in the town of Weimar. So the constitution that it drew up was called the Weimar Republic.

The Weimar Republic

- Germany was to be a democracy. The Reichstag (Parliament) was to make laws and control the government.
- Men and women aged 21 and over could vote in elections for deputies to the Reichstag. Voting was by proportional representation (PR), so a party receiving 10 per cent of the votes had 10 per cent of the deputies.
- The head of the government was the chancellor.
- The head of state was the president, who was to be elected every seven years. The president could dissolve the Reichstag, order fresh elections and, in times of emergency, suspend the Reichstag and rule by himself (Article 48).
This new constitution had several in-built weaknesses. Between 1919 and 1933, no party won more than half the votes cast in elections for the Reichstag. As a result, the system of proportional representation meant that no party won more than half the seats. Consequently, whichever party formed the government could do so only by working with one or more other parties in a coalition. When faced with serious political problems, the various members of the coalitions often fell out. In addition, many people, such as the aristocratic families (Junkers), industrialists and members of the army, did not like the new democracy. They wanted Germany to have one strong leader, as it had before the war.

But whatever problems there were in the constitution of the Weimar Republic, they were nothing compared to the series of crises that the government had to face in the period 1919-24. The first of these, and in some ways the cause of all of them, was the peace settlement at the end of the First World War.

What was the impact of the Treaty of Versailles on the Republic?

The Treaty of Versailles was a vindictive treaty which punished Germany for its part in the war. Germany was split in two. It lost 13 per cent of its territory and 10 per cent of its population, and restrictions were placed on the size of its armed forces and the weapons those forces could have. Article 231 of the treaty (the 'War Guilt' clause) stated that Germany had to take full responsibility for starting the war and causing any damage that had occurred. This clause was the basis for the reparations payments that it was decided Germany should pay. No figure was set until 1921, when it was decided that Germany should pay $6600 million.

The Germans were furious at the terms of the treaty. They claimed that they had agreed to the armistice because they believed that the peace treaty would be based on Wilson's Fourteen Points. These had been published in January 1918 and were much less severe than the final treaty. The Germans also complained that they had been given no say in negotiating the treaty. They said it was a 'Diktat' (a dictated peace). Later opponents of the treaty were to argue that, if the German people had no say in drawing up the treaty, then they had no obligation to abide by its terms.

The new chancellor, Philipp Scheidemann, at first suggested that Germany should not sign the treaty. However, there was little choice as the Allies would probably have invaded if the Germans had refused to sign. So the treaty was signed – and the Weimar Republic became even more unpopular.

The Kapp putsch

The Spartacist uprising of January 1919 was only one example of political problems faced by the Weimar Republic. The Spartacists had been defeated with the help of the Freikorps, but this group itself caused the government great difficulties. Among its members were a group of extreme nationalists who opposed democracy and believed that the only way to prevent the spread of communism was through strong leadership and a strong army.

The Treaty of Versailles said that Germany's army must number no more than 100,000, including the volunteer Freikorps units. But in 1920 when Ebert tried to disband the Freikorps, there was rebellion. The Freikorps marched on Berlin and proclaimed Dr Wolfgang Kapp as Germany's new leader. Since the army refused to fire on the Freikorps, the government fled. But Kapp was not popular with the people, who obeyed a government request for a general strike. Soon gas, water and electricity were cut off and Berlin came to halt. Kapp was forced to flee to Sweden, the government returned and the Freikorps was disbanded.

Even so, ex-members of the Freikorps continued to cause difficulties. They formed a group called 'Organisation Consil', which in 1921 murdered Matthias Erzberger, a leading politician who agreed to the signing of the Treaty of Versailles. In 1922 the group murdered Walther Rathenau, Germany's Foreign Minister.

Was the Weimar Republic doomed from the early years? (1919-1922)

Bad Points

- People thought they had stabbed Germany in the back for signing the armistice in November.
- For that they were given the name the November Criminals.
- There was revolts from the Communist Party and there was a uprising from the Spartacists KAPP-1920.
- Government relied upon armed groups to keep power e.g. Freikorps.
- Coalition Government was weak because groups found it difficult to make decisions.
- Government always to be linked with the humiliation of the Treaty.
- Influential people in Germany did not trust democracy.

Good Points

- They got rid of dictatorialship: the Kaiser and replaced it with a democracy.
- They tried to have a fair system of government.
Not everybody in Germany welcomed the 'cultural revival'. The older, traditional people, (such as Hitler) thought that Germany was losing its morals and people should be more traditional.

Was the Weimar Republic doomed from the start?

The Weimar Republic started off not so well but there was a middle period where things picked up but towards the end things started to go badly again. From 1919-22 the Weimar Republic was starting off badly. The public had thought the new government had started Germany given Germany a ‘stabil’ in the book. Because the leader of the Weimar Republic had signed the Armistice with the Allies on November 11th 1918 which also led to them being called ‘November Criminals’. The new government was also a democracy which was unpopular with the majority of the public. And they found it difficult to trust as they had never had a democracy before. There was also many uprisings from the Communists and the Freikorps. The Spartacists (Communists) uprising of January 1919 was crushed by the Freikorps, a group of volunteer soldiers, who were also giving the government problems. In 1920, Ebert, the leader of the Weimar Republic, tried to disband the Freikorps but there was a rebellion. The Freikorps marched into Berlin and gave Germany a new leader. The government had to flee. To bring an end to the rebellion the government had to have a general strike. Gas, water and electricity were cut off and Berlin came to a halt, forcing the new leader to flee. The government returned and the Freikorps were disbanded.

1923 was a crisis year for Germany and in that time somebody else tried to take power - Hitler. In November 1923 Hitler wanted to take power so at a beer hall in Munich he announced he was going to take over the government. The next morning he marched into Munich with General Ludendorff and Nazi supporters but the police did not join him and he didn’t gain enough support. This incident became known as the Beer Hall (or Munich) Putsch and it resulted in Hitler being serving a 9 months of a 5 year sentence.

Also in 1923 Germany was having serious money problems. The country could not afford to pay the second installment of reparations which had been set by the hated Treaty of Versailles. So the French could not leave the Ruhr. The French got the money they were owed, they took over the Ruhr Valley, an area of Germany which had much industry. The German government told the people of the Ruhr to put up passive Resistance, but then the French opened fire and in 8 months killed 132 people and told 150,000 to get out of their homes. The Ruhr incident ruined the German economy because the richest part of the country was no longer producing goods. The people expelled from their homes also had to be housed and fed by the government - even though it could not afford to do this. To get more money, the German government started printing lots of paper money. However, this started to cause the prices in shops to rise. The more paper money was printed, the more prices got higher which resulted in hyperinflation in Germany and the money becoming worthless. Millions of people faced starvation, especially those on fixed incomes such as the elderly. To try and sort out the problems, a new government led by Gustav Stresemann was formed in September 1923. He called off the 'passive resistance' in the Ruhr and stopped the printing of paper money. Stresemann abolished the mark and made a new currency called the Rentenmark. In the long term, these measures saved Germany from collapse.

Stresemann also did a lot more for the country. He was only Chancellor for 4 months but he was Foreign Minister for 5 years. He managed to organise meetings with the Americans to end when the USA lent Germany 800 million gold marks. This was called the Dawes Plan (1924). In 1929, the Young Plan extended the time Germany had to pay reparations until 1938 (they actually stopped though in 1930). Between 1924 and 1929, Germany received 25 billion marks in loans which helped to rebuild German industry.

Stresemann also helped Germany's relations with other countries. Many peace treaties were signed between countries between 1924 and 1929, and in 1926 Germany joined the League of Nations.

Between 1924 and 1929, Berlin also experienced a cultural revival. Originally, the city became a centre of the arts, with 320 newspapers and 60 theatres. German literature flourished and playwrights won international fame. The improvements in foreign relations and the cultural revival made the years of 1924-29 to become known as the 'Golden Age'.

However, this 'Golden Age' was an illusion. The economy was only doing so well due to foreign loans. Also, exports were falling and the government was spending huge amounts on welfare and healthcare.
By 1928 there was also arguments and disputes and in the 1920's prices for farm produce fell so farmers never showed the good prosperity and many were in debt. During 1924-29 the political stability was bad. Many Germans hated the Treaty of Versailles and blamed the government for it.

The 'Golden Age' came to an end in 1929. There was the Wall Street Crash which lead to a World Depression. The Americans wanted the money they lent Germany back and there was also high unemployment in Germany too.

In conclusion the Weimar Republic probably had more bad times then good. The government started off badly as it was disliked and in 1923 it went through a year of crisis. Even though things picked up from 1924-29 this was only an illusion to an extent and the depression in 1929 made the government go downhill again.

An excellent effort - you have really kept sight of the set question. Throughout your extended answer and produced an excellent piece of work well done!
Test on the Rise of Hitler

1. After World War I, Germany faced many problems. The Treaty of Versailles was signed and Germany lost territory, some of its population and had to pay 13.2 billion in reparations. Also, Germany had no government as the Kaiser had been abolished and many people were moving to discuss political instability. You could go on to discuss Versailles.

2. The Treaty of Versailles added to Germany's problems as land was lost, reparations had to be paid, the armed forces were cut down and they had to take total blame for the war. Many Germans disagreed with the Treaty of Versailles and they wanted to get rid of it. Add details, e.g., names used for the Government's betrayal.

3. The Munich Putsch was when Hitler and the Nazi Party attempted to take power. They marched into Munich but failed to take over as they didn't have the support from the police and other people. It resulted in Hitler being sent to prison for 5 years but he only served 9 months and then was let out for good behaviour.

4. 1923 was a bad year for Germany because there was inflation and hyperinflation. Many small revolts and rebellions were taking place against the government. Such as the Spartacist League uprising (Communists) and whether Germany could afford to pay the reparations. So what did France and Belgium do?

5. Things got better for Germany after 1924 because a new Chancellor came to power; Schleissmann. He managed to negotiate with the Americans loan for Germany, such as the Young Plan. He also made Germany more acceptable in the world as he was part of the Locarno treaties, which promised that these countries would never fight against each other again. From 1924, Berlin also became a party city. There were new writers, singers and artists emerging which made it a more popular city than some, but not for long.

1. The country was in serious trouble. - effect on Germany?

7. In February 1933, the Reichstag was set on fire. Hitler used this incident to his advantage as he said the communists started it, which meant everyone would try and stop the communist party as they were deeply hated. Hitler gained more votes at the 1933 election.

8. "Mein Kampf" (My Struggle) was a book written by Hitler whilst he was in prison.

9. It was written when Hitler was in prison.

10. Three ideas from "Mein Kampf" are:
   1. No Jew can be a member of Germany, only Germans are allowed to be.
   2. Poor people who do not have jobs do not get any money.
   3. The economy will be looked after better and they will be given more money.

11. The Nazis won people over to vote for them by making these ideas appealing to many people. They had ideas that were Nationalistic, Anti-Jewish, and Socialistic, so not everyone who voted for the Nazi party agreed with all of them, just maybe some. The Nazis also hated the Treaty of Versailles just like the majority of German people. Certain people were also finding things difficult such as the farmers. By making some of his ideas appear to them, he managed to gain their vote. He also made bad meetings with industrialists and other rich people who didn't like democracy but preferred a dictatorship, just like Hitler. At the time, unemployment was also high so he tried to appeal to them too to try and get their vote. By making his ideas appear to many different people, he managed to get lots of different people voting for him. A good discussion, but you could have mentioned propaganda and use of violence.

THE FINAL SOLUTION

In January 1942, when most of Europe and much of Russia was under Nazi rule, fifteen leading Nazis met for a secret conference in Wansee, a suburb of Berlin. There they discussed what they called the "final solution of the Jewish Problem." The results of these decisions made at the Wansee Conference were later described by Rudolf Höss, commander of several concentration camps, during his trial for war crimes in 1946:

"The "final solution" of the Jewish question meant the complete extermination of all Jews in Europe. I was ordered to establish extermination facilities at Auschwitz in June 1941. At that time there were already in .. Poland three other extermination camps: Belzec, Treblinka and Walzke. ..

I visited Treblinka to find out how they carried out their extermination. The camp commandant at Treblinka told me he had liquidated 50,000 in the course of half a year, ..

He used monocrop gas and I did not think his methods were very efficient. So when I set up the extermination building at Auschwitz, I used Zyklon B, which was a crystallized Prussian acid which we dropped into the death chamber from a small opening. It took from three to fifteen minutes to kill all the people in the death chamber, depending on climatic conditions. We knew when the people were dead because their screaming stopped. We usually waited about half an hour before we opened the doors and removed the bodies. After the bodies were removed our special commandos took off the rings and extracted the gold from the teeth of the corpses.

Another improvement we made over Treblinka was that we built our gas chambers to accommodate 2000 people at one time, whereas at Treblinka their ten gas chambers only accommodated 200 people each."

Between 1942 and 1945 some four and a half million died in the extermination camps. But, as you have already found out, Jews were already being killed in the concentration camps set up before the war, and were being shot by Einsatz units in Russia. In all, the Nazis slaughtered six million Jews.

How was any of this possible? Why did nobody protest or rebel against what was happening? For a start, the Jews did not usually know what was going to happen to them until it was too late. The American writer, William Shirer, explains:

'None of the captives ... realised what was in store for them. In fact some of them were given pretty picture postcards ... to be signed and sent back home to their relatives with a printed inscription saying: 'We are doing very well here. We have work and we are well treated. We await your arrival.'"

The gas chambers themselves and the adjoining crematoria, viewed from a short distance, were not sinister-looking places at all. .. Over them were well kept lawns with flower borders; the signs at the entrances merely said BATH. The unsuspecting Jews thought they were simply being taken to the baths for the de-lousing that was customary at all camps. And taken to the accompaniment of sweet music!

"For there was light music. An orchestra of "young and pretty girls all dressed in white blouses and navy-blue skirts", as one survivor remembered, had been formed from among the inmates. ..

To such music .. the men, women and children were led into the "bath houses" where they were told to undress preparatory to taking a "shower". Sometimes they were even given towels. Once they were inside the "shower room" — and perhaps this was the first moment they realised something was amiss, for as many as two thousand were packed into the chamber like sardines, making it difficult to take a bath — the massive door was slid shut, locked and hermetically sealed."

And what about the Germans themselves? Why did they do nothing to stop the killing? Historians have many answers to this question: people did not know it was happening because the extermination camps were a closely-guarded secret; people were too scared to complain; people who did ask what was happening were told that the camps were false rumours spread by the British. But perhaps another answer is that the Germans had been trained by Nazi propaganda to treat Jews as if they were not human beings. As one historian, Richard Grunberger, puts it:

"As far as the great majority were concerned, Jewish suffering affected beings in another galaxy rather than inhabitants of the same planet as themselves. .. The holocaust [the extermination of the Jews] was not a real event for most Germans, not because it occurred in wartime and under conditions of secrecy, but because Jews were astronomically remote and not real people."

Work section

A. Rudolf Höss, the commandant of Auschwitz, said at his trial in 1946:

'Let the public continue to regard me as the bloodthirsty beast, the cruel sadist and the mass murderer; for the masses could never imagine the commandant of Auschwitz in any other light. They could never understand that he, too, had a heart and that he was not evil.'

1. Judging by the evidence you have studied in this chapter, explain in detail why Rudolf Höss can be considered 'evil'.
2. Suggest why he thought he was not evil, despite the things he did at Auschwitz.
A map showing the main concentration and extermination camps. The figures are the approximate number of people who died there.
In January 1942, a secret conference was held in Wannsee with 15 leading Nazis. Here they discussed what they needed to do about the Jewish problem. The term ‘final solution’ was what means when the Nazis got rid of the Jews by killing them in extermination camps.

Between 1942 and 1945, about four and a half million Jews died in extermination camps. The Jews did not protest about what was happening in the camps because the captives sent pretty postcards home saying they were well when they went to be killed in the extermination camps. They were told they were going to shower and sometimes they were given towels. Also music was played which made it nice.

German people did not do anything to stop the killing because people were too scared to complain and people who did ask questions were told the British were spreading rumours and many started to believe the Nazi propaganda about the Jews.

Questions

1. What happened in January 1942?
2. Explain the term ‘Final Solution’
3. How many Jews were killed between 1942-1945 in the final solution?
4. Why did the Jews not protest about what was happening in the concentration camps?
5. Why did the German people not do anything to stop the killing in the concentration camps?
What was it like to live in Nazi Germany?

1. It was so important for the Nazis to control the youth of Germany so they could train them to be Nazis in the future.

2. The youth groups that were set up by the Nazis were:
   - Little Fellows for boys aged 6-10
   - Young Folk for boys aged 10-14
   - Hitler Youth for boys aged 14-18
   - Young Girls for girls aged 10-14
   - League of German maidens for girls aged 14-17

3. The main purpose of the Hitler Youth was to train young men so they could become part of the army when they were older. It was partly a success as many boys joined however Swing kids did not and the Navajos (gang + Edelweiss Pirates used to beat up the Hitler Youth).

4. In Nazi German schools emphasis was placed on subjects that would produce ‘ideal Nazis’. History - In History pupils learnt how successful the Nazis had been, in Biology they learnt about Nazi racial beliefs, in Art lessons were treated, pupils also learnt (race studies and ideology about Nazi ideas). Girls learnt more about domestic science whereas boys were given more military training.

In my school today girls learning doesn’t have the emphasis on domestic science but we can learn just the same subjects as boys. Boys don’t have to do military training at school. Also in today’s schools people are treated equally. But in German schools the message that Aryans were superior to blacks, eastern Europeans and Jews was taught.

Excellent Work.
The place of women

Shortly after coming to power in 1933, Hitler made a Law for the Encouragement of Marriage. It said that the government would give all newly married couples a loan of 1000 marks – the equivalent of nine months wages. When their first child was born they could keep a quarter of the money. On the birth of their second child they could keep the second quarter. They could keep the third quarter on the birth of a third child, and the entire amount on the birth of a fourth.

Ten years later, in 1943, the Nazi leaders planned another law to encourage people to have children – but this law was very different.

“All single and married women up to the age of thirty-five who do not already have four children should be obliged to produce four children by racially pure German men. Whether these men are married is without significance. Every family that already has four children must set the husband free for this action.

The new law never came into effect, but it shows us exactly what the Nazi leaders thought about women: their job was to bear as many children as possible. Hitler summed it up when he said that women should stick to the three Ks – Kinder, Kirche und Küche.

Women in Nazi Germany therefore found themselves being forced to stay at home. Within months of Hitler coming to power, many women doctors and civil servants were sacked from their jobs. Then women lawyers and teachers were dismissed. By 1939 there were few women left in professional jobs.

Even at home, women were not free to do as they liked. The Nazi party tried to stop them from following fashions. Make-up and wearing trousers were frowned upon. Hair was to be arranged either in a bun or in plaits, but not dyed or perm. Slimming was discouraged because being slim was not thought to be good for childbearing.

The only thing that women were actively encouraged to do was to have children. Every 12 August, the birthday of Hitler’s mother, the Motherhood Cross was awarded to the women who had most children.

Work section

A. Explain in your own words how the ‘Law for the Encouragement of Marriage’ tried to encourage married couples to have large families.

B. Read this advertisement which appeared in a German newspaper in 1935:

"52 year-old, pure Aryan physician, fighter at Tannenburg, wishing to settle down, desires male offspring through civil marriage with young, healthy virgin of pure Aryan stock, undemanding, don't spend much, suited to heavy work and thrifty, with flat heels, without earrings, fit possible without money. No marriage brokers. Secrecy guaranteed. Letters to box number AEH 151.094. C/o M. Neustet."

1. Describe in your own words the kind of woman this doctor wanted to marry.
2. For what reasons do you think the doctor wanted to be married?
3. Can you think of a reason why the doctor preferred his future wife to have no money?
4. How likely do you think the doctor was to find a wife through this advertisement?
5. Do you think this advertisement would be allowed in a newspaper today? Explain your answer.
Women in Germany

A. The Law 8 for the Encouragement of Marriage tried to encourage married couples to have large families by bribing them with money. When a couple got married they were given 1000 marks, 9 months' wages, by the state. If they had one child they got to keep 1/4 of the money; if they had two they got to keep 1/2 of the money; if they had three they could keep 3/4 of the money and if they had four they could keep all of the money. The Nazis was going to bring in a law where a married man could get a woman who wasn’t pregnant but this never happened. Women should stick to the 3 ‘k’s – Kinder, Kirche und Küche (children, church and cooking). On the 12th August, Hitler's mother's birthday, the Motherhood Cross was awarded to the women with the most children.

B. 1. The doctor wanted to marry a young, aryan, virgin who would be undemanding and plain.
2. The doctor probably wanted to be married so he could get the 1000 marks and be in control of someone and have children.
3. The doctor preferred his future wife to have no money so he could be in control of her.
4. I don’t think the doctor would have been very likely to find a wife through this advertisement because he was old and demanding.
5. I think the advertisement would be allowed in newspapers today but nobody would answer it because the man is too sexist and women wouldn’t put up with it.

Excellent
Nazi Germany Test 1933-45

1. Hitler became Chancellor in 1933 but he didn't gain complete power in Germany until he had an election and the Nazis won. After Hindenburg's death in 1934.

2. The Night of the Long Knives was when Hitler had many people in the SA killed because he thought the SA wanted communist power.

3. The Nazis used the mass media and culture to control people in Germany by controlling what went into films, burning books that disagreed with Nazi ideas and banning 2500 authors and writers. Also, Nuremberg rallies were held where Hitler spoke out to support his ideas about Nazism. This event took place in a stadium usually on special days such as Hitler's birthday.

4. At the Olympics in 1936, Jesse Owens won 4 gold medals. This proved the Nazis' racial theory wrong as Jesse Owens was a black American and according to the Nazis, black people were inferior.

5. To keep opposition weak, the Nazis used violence. When there was opposition from the aristocratic organisation led by Helmuth von Monck, Hitler had the leaders arrested. University students who handed out pamphlets against Hitler were also executed. To keep any opposition weak, Hitler also used propaganda to make out the Nazis were loved so the opposition wouldn't think they would have a chance. He also had the SS - an elite bodyguard, the Waffen SS - part of the SS that worked with the army, part of the SS that ran the concentration camps and the Gestapo - a ruthless police force that could arrest and prison people without a trial.

6. Restitution is when you take away or stop someone from having something.
7. 5 examples to show how Jews were persecuted:
   - shops boycotted
   - The Reich citizenship: Jewish people cannot be citizens of the state.
   - Jews were not allowed to marry Germans
   - they had a curfew
   - had to hand in any gold, silver or jewels they had

8. The 'Kristallnacht' was when Jewish shops, businesses and homes were ruined when the Nazis broke the windows and turned the places upside down. 1938

9. The final solution was when the Nazis decided that to get rid of the Jews they would need extermination camps.
   - When was this decided? 1942

10. Other groups that were persecuted in Nazi Germany were:
    - Homosexuals
    - not gay - a few
    - Eastern Europeans
    - work shy - non-Germans
    - Tramps + Beggars
    - Gypsies
    - mentally and physically disabled - euthanasia (not a gas)

11. Women: not allowed to work, no women in professions, they were expected to keep the house - kinds (children), Kirche (church) and Kuche (cooking).
    - Welfare - unemployment was cut. The average working hours per week increased from 45 in 1928 to 50 in 1939 and wages decreased. Women were not allowed trade unions.
    - Youth - joined certain groups. For boys it was: Little Fellows (6-14), Young Flock (10-14) and Hitler Youth (14-18) to give them the Nazi way of thinking and to prepare them for the army. For girls it was: Young Girls (10-14) and the League of German Maidens (14-17) to teach them Nazi ideas and to prepare them for motherhood. Also at school the amount of time spent on PE was reduced as fitness was important.
12. Totalitarian regime is when the regime concerns every part of your life. Hitler did establish this regime by 1945 as he controlled everyone's way of thinking — but opposition still existed.

33/40 Excellent knowledge — just at times you need to be a little more deliberate with your responses. Very encouraging. Well done!

9. Make two lists about the STRENGTHS and WEAKNESSES of the League of Nations.
1. a) Source A shows that, as the great god of war, leaving over a small number of nations, Hitler is saying, 'There's some mistake. It was your small brother I sent for.' As this is a cartoon from a British newspaper on 6 September 1939 (a few days after war had been declared), it is probably trying to boost morale. The god of war, Mars, has been made larger than Hitler as he represents the Allies and they want to seem powerful and stronger than Hitler, who represents Germany.

   The words which Hitler speaks is aiming to tell the reader that Hitler wasn't expecting the Allies to put up such a strong fight and that he would prefer an Allied side that wasn't as powerful to fight against. Good use of the source but you should have included some own knowledge.

b) Germany invaded Poland in 1939 because Hitler wanted Lebensraum, a living space, for his nation. He also wanted to become a great and powerful nation and he felt gaining as much land as possible would achieve this goal. But, it was not plan to keep Poland himself earlier, a pact was signed between Germany and the Soviet Union named the Nazi-Soviet Pact. It was signed by two politicians, Molotov and Ribbentrop, and it was an agreement the Germany and the Soviet Union would never fight against one another. This was a surprise to the rest of the world as the Soviet Union was communist which was against Nazi belief. In fact, Germany + the Soviet Union also decided to split up Poland and the Baltic States between them. By doing this, Hitler had gained an ally. The Pact gave Hitler the confidence to invade other reasons? German speaking people to be re-united...

2. a) The Treaty of Versailles placed lots of limits on Germany's strength.

   The army was cut down to 100,000 men and conscription was not allowed, the navy was cut down and there were only 24 ships and no submarines allowed, and Germany was also not allowed an airforce.

b) The Allies were determined to punish Germany because the war had left their countries ruined and/or killed many of their men. Clemenceau* was especially angry as much of France had been ruined. Many

* (leader of France)
You have explained the consequences of the war in detail, but Germany was punished for other reasons. People lost their homes, roads and railways were demolished, many factories no longer existed so many didn’t have jobs, and farm animals had been used to feed the soldiers, many of which had been killed or wounded in the fighting. David Lloyd George, Prime Minister of Britain, was in a lot of debt, and many British soldiers had been killed. Even though Woodrow Wilson had entered the USA into the war until 1917, America lost 116,000 men in the fighting.

1) I don’t think the statement ‘The most important reason why Germany signed the Treaty of Versailles was the reparations settlement’ is totally true. I think Germany having to pay £6,600 million in reparations added to the hatred of the Treaty of Versailles which they called it (dictated peace) as they couldn’t afford to pay that much money for it just after the war. Other reasons too added to the hatred such as Article 231, the war clause guilt clause. This states that Germany should take total blame for the war. I think they probably hated this move because they probably new of occupied that the Allies would want money (such as Danzig, Memel, and Alsace-Lorraine which were all taken away from Germany) and their aims were to be reduced but Germany didn’t feel they were totally to blame for the war. They thought that at least Austria-Hungary should take blame for it too as Germany didn’t start the war by themselves.

So even though they repulsed they had to pay. Added to the hatred of the Treaty of Versailles, I think the thing they hated the most was the war guilt clause.

3) The main aims of the League of Nations were to prevent war and promote world peace. The league also wanted to improve working conditions, health care, prostitution, and drug problems and make the world a better place to live in.

b) Some major nations like America, Germany, and Russia were not part of the League when it was first set up because even though Woodrow Wilson had the idea of the League and he wanted to be part of it, the American public didn't want to become involved in Europe's problems. Germany was not allowed to join as it fought against the Allies in World War I. Russia didn't join as it surrendered to Germany in World War I and it was a communist country which didn't want to join anyway.

4. (i) The Italian leader in 1939 was Mussolini.
(ii) Appeasement means giving aggressive nations what they want. In the 1930s Britain used the policy of appeasement towards Germany. When Germany wanted the Sudetenland, Britain allowed him to take it and when Germany remilitarized the Rhineland Britain allowed Hitler to do it even though it went against the Treaty of Versailles.

Germany and Italy had aggressive foreign policy for similar reasons. Both countries wanted to take more land to make them greater. Italy took Abyssinia, which was the only important African country which went under European rule. Mussolini had tried to invade before but failed, but second time round he succeeded because one main power in Europe had used the policy of appeasement towards him. Germany took Czechoslovakia for example because he wanted more living space for his people. In this way both foreign policies were similar but Hitler Germany also wanted to go against the Treaty of Versailles which is why Germany lost much land which Hitler wanted to get back. Mussolini didn't need to go against the Treaty of Versailles because he was on the Allies' side in World War I.

4. (i)League of Nations

(ii) The Second World War started for many reasons. Firstly, there was a reason why it started because it allowed countries to get away with invading others which as Mussolini had set an example to other nations. It was another reason because it meant Britain and France had to use force to stop Germany as they had promised to help Poland if they were ever invaded. III caused WW2 to start because opposing the Treaty of Versailles meant making the countries building up armed forces which encourages a war. IV Japan's invasion of Manchuria showed again that aggressive nations could get away with using this invading countries.
All reasons are important as each other for starting the war. If I and IV hadn't of happened examples wouldn't of been set for other and the league wouldn't have been more to seem so weak and aggressive nations to fall. If I hadn't of happened then Germany wouldn't have built up armed forces or look land which meant no problems wouldn't have been caused. If II hadn't of happened then Britain wouldn't of had to use force to try and stop Germany. You have used the right technique - by trying to link points but I guess having didn't allow you to develop this.

Section A

1a) The message in the cartoon is telling us how Britain and France think they have Mussolini under control but really he is dragging them into danger. Mussolini wanted to take over Abyssinia, a country in Africa, and Britain and France decided to use a policy of appeasement. They made the Hoare-Laval pact - named after the French and British people who decided it. It said Italy could take over some of Abyssinia. Mussolini took over the whole of Abyssinia instead and took no notice of the pact. The woman in the cartoon who represents the League shows how Mussolini was dragging the League along too because pacts were being made outside of it and it had no control over nations, such as Italy. When economic sanctions were made to Italy for invading Abyssinia, it excluded oil so the sanctions didn’t have a great effect. Britain, France and the League had no control over Mussolini.

1b) Italy invaded Abyssinia in 1935 for various reasons. After the Wall Street Crash in 1929, there had been an economic depression. Unemployment was high in countries, voters went with parties who promised to control the situation but like Mussolini, they had extreme ideas and an aggressive policy. To make countries great again they often some invaded others.

Italy decided to invade Abyssinia, an African country. It was the only important African country that had not yet been colonised by a European country. Also, Italy had previously attempted to colonise Abyssinia but were defeated. This was a great embarrassment to Mussolini and Italy.

Mussolini wanted to take control of Abyssinia to prevent embarrassment and to try and make Italy have a greater Empire.
Section B

3a) At the Paris peace conference President Wilson hoped to make a fair and everlasting peace. He had ideas which were put into his ‘fourteen points’ which he thought would keep peace forever. One of his ideas was set up the League of Nations, an international organisation that would aim to keep peace and solve disputes through talking rather than fighting.

3b) Clemenceau wanted the Treaty of Versailles to be harsh on Germany for various reasons. Germany had invaded France and for the safety of the French Clemenceau wanted Germany to be made extremely weak so this could never happen again. The land in France was devastated. It would cost a lot of money to repair everything and pay for the costs. Clemenceau wanted revenge so he wanted Germany to pay a huge sum of money so the cavalry could get back on its feet. Farmland was useless, food was scarce, railways had been blown up. Many people had no homes to go to and many factories where these people worked had also been destroyed. Clemenceau wanted Germany to pay for what had happened to France and he was nicknamed ‘the Tiger’ because of how harshly and how much revenge he wanted on Germany.

3c) The Treaty of Versailles was hated by most Germans for many reasons including the amount of reparations the country had to pay, the military restrictions and loss of territory. In 1921 the amount of reparations Germany paid had to pay for the losses was decided. The final amount was £6,600 million, a huge sum of money. This made the German people very angry. The country was in debt after the war and people were starving; they couldn’t afford to pay the huge sum of reparations. Military restrictions were placed on Germany which also... continued to the hatred of the Treaty. The army was reduced to 100,000 men and the navy was reduced to 15,000 men. The country wasn’t allowed an airforce or submarines and the amount of ships they had was reduced along with weapons. Conscription wasn’t allowed either. Germany realised their armed forces were going to be cut down but this was severe. The Germans wondered what would happen to them if they were ever attacked because they wouldn’t have a large army to fight with.

The loss of territory also angered the German people. Lots of land was given away such as the Sudetenland which was given to a new country, Czechoslovakia. Danzig and Memel were made into free cities and put under the League of Nations rule. The Saar region was an important coalfield area Germany which meant the country lots of money but it was decided that it would be placed under League of Nations for French rule for 15 years and after that time the people of the region could decide which country they wanted to belong to. These land losses made Germany angry as the country was weakened but also German speaking people were not united in the same country. East Prussia was cut off from the rest of Germany by the Polish Corridor which angered Germans even more.

Germany realised that they would have to pay reparations, have their army cut down and lose land but they didn’t expect these factors to be so severe which led to them hating the Treaty of Versailles.

section C
7a) The source was published by an opponent of the Weimar government. I think this because Dr. Kapp the man who started the source criticises the government and the state of the country.

‘Hardship is growing’ and ‘the government lacks authority’
Also I know that Dr Kapp disliked the Weimar Republic as he attempted to take control of Germany but the government managed to stop this from happening.

7b) The German people were angered by the events in the Ruhr in 1923 because it cost them money and sent them into deeper debt. It all started when Germany couldn't afford to pay the second instalment of reparations. The country was still in debt from the war and inflation was spiralling out of control. The French were going to get their money one way or another so they decided to take over the Ruhr region of Germany which was a coalfield. The German government told the German people of the area to put up passive resistance and not do anything. This angered the French and they shot many Germans and threw them out of their homes. Because the government had told those people to put up 'passive resistance' they now had to look after them. They needed accommodation and food which they couldn't afford to do. This event angered the German people because they lost even more money. They lost industry from the Ruhr region and they had to pay for food and shelter for the people that had been kicked out of their homes.

7c) The photograph shows some explanation of why Germany faced difficulties in 1923. The children playing with the huge amounts of banknotes shows how worthless it had become because if it was worth a lot of money it would probably be locked away securely. Also 1923 was a crisis year for Germany as there was inflation and hyperinflation in the country. The money being printed was worth less and less daily and sometimes the value of it went down throughout 1 day. Workers were being paid twice a day so their family could rush to the shops before the prices of goods went up and the... value of the money went down. Sometimes money had to be taken in a wheelbarrow just to buy a few things. The elderly and people living off their savings suffered most whilst businessmen were better off and benefited through the inflation.

9a) The education of German children between 1933 and 1945 taught them Nazi ideas so they would be with them forever. In schools children were told not to spot a Jew and were taught how bad they were. Text books and curriculum was changed to show how the Aryan was the master race and how other races were inferior. A huge emphasis was put on teaching P.E. as it was important for boys when they went in the army and girls so they could be healthy for motherhood.

9b) Some groups of young people in Germany disagreed with Nazi ideas. Every German boy from the age of 14-18 had to join the Hitler Youth. This organisation taught Nazi ideas and prepared boys for the army and it was popular with many. However some groups of young people such as Edelweiss Pirates, Nervous Gang and Swing kids disapproved of it. The Edelweiss Pirates and Nervous gang didn't like to be told what to do and refused to join. Instead they would beat up members of the Hitler Youth and some even helped Allied soldiers during World War Two. Swing kids didn't like the traditional music and ways that were encouraged by the Nazis. They preferred to listen to jazz music and were influenced by films and music from Britain and America. They were disapproved of by many Germans.

9c) Life in Germany changed as World War Two got nearer. Working hours rose from an average of 45 hours per week in 1938 or 50 hours a week in 1938. The average wages people earn also fell; German people were working harder for less.

Women had to also begin to work, something which had previously been shunned upon by the Nazis. The government concentrated more on preparing the country for war and arms were made and the army grew even more.

The years leading up to the war changed life in Germany as more and more time and effort was put into the war than anything else.
